The Journal of Participatory Medicine advances the science of meaningful individual participation in both research and healthcare delivery, and the transformative use of technology to empower patients and citizens. The journal focuses on co-production, participatory design, participatory research and education methods, technology for patient self-care, cultivating strong patient-clinician partnerships, enhancing patient and caregiver experiences, and advancing the field of citizen science. The journal is the official journal of the Society for Participatory Medicine.

As a fully open-access journal, the Journal of Participatory Medicine serves a global community of scientists, educators, clinicians, advocates, patients, and the wider public. We welcome submissions that explore innovative ways to foster collaboration and empower individuals throughout their health journey. We proudly publish diverse content, including original research, reviews, insightful viewpoints, compelling case studies, and evocative essays. A unique feature of the journal is the inclusion of perspectives written by patients and caregivers. Our “Extraordinary Lives” section further honors individuals who have exemplified the spirit of participatory medicine, highlighting their profound contributions.
